Laurel Andres began running groups in 1982 at the time of the central coast floods. She coordinated and facilitated emergency mental health services for the Marina District in San Francisco during the aftermath of the Loma Prieta earthquake and has since debriefed and counseled many companies, individuals and families following acute disasters and periods of long term stress. She has completed advanced training in multi-modal approaches to Critical Incidents. She maintains a private psychotherapy practice and is a trainer and consultant to the corporate sector and to public agencies and hospitals around issues of stress management, strategic communication improvement, and balancing work and home life.

Tim Woods has been doing work in trauma since his first position in a hospital emergency room in the mid 70's. His first Critical Incident Debriefing and training came subsequent to the 1982 Santa Cruz Mountain Floods. He supervised staff and provided direct services to police, fire, rescue and civilian populations following the 1989 Loma Prieta Earthquake. Tim participated in the debriefing efforts in Oklahoma City following the bombing of the Murrah Federal Building in 1995. He has a particular interest in working with men and leads four on-going men's support groups in his private practice.
